CANTERBURY, B.C., THURSDAY, SEPT. 12, 1901.

The Shecan City Drill prints from a letter received from Mr. Wilfrid Laurier: "I have found Mr. Gallier a perfect gentleman and a true friend, and during the session he attended to his duties as diligently as any other member." No doubt Mr. Gallier is a very nice man, but, Wilfrid, he can't work machineless telegraph between Windermere and Golden at a profit.

In this district employers of labor have had a good deal to contend with this season. Men have been scarce and "some" of the men have taken advantage of this and given as little work as possible in return for their wages. This is unfair not only to their employers, but to their fellow-workmen, and to themselves. There are many good honest men working and it is not fair that a few hobos should take off a good per centage of their hard work. It is not right that employers should have to give a full day's pay for a half day's work. Yet the employers have to give 1000 men work in order to get their contracts finished on time. We believe that good men should be well paid and loved and will uphold them when they do right, but when they refuse to give honest work for fair wages we will not neglect to stir them up.

We have heard good men complain that others are not doing the "square thing" by them or their employers and it is about time for those loafers to take a tumble.

One of the boldest and most astounding schemes lately broached in mining comes from South Africa. The ore here is of a moderately low grade and the margin of profit is small. Some of the mines have reached such depth that the hoisting of the ore cuts quite a figure in the expense of mining. In order to obviate this it is now proposed to erect mills in the mines in large chambers blasted out for the purpose. The water for the reduction plants is always present in the workings.

It is claimed that the plan is perfectly feasible. The tailings can be used to fill up the stopes from which the ore has been extracted. The mills can be erected on the lower levels of the mines so that the ore will come to them by gravitation. The mining engineers of the Rand say that the scheme is entirely practicable and among them can be found many who have international reputations. The plan is to be followed out in the "deep deeps," as the deepest mines in that section are called.

The plan seems reasonable and should operate satisfactorily. By locating the reduction plant practically in the ore bodies the cost of hoisting and haulage is entirely eliminated and this must cut down the cost on the final production of the metal. It will enable the mining and milling at a profit of lower grade ores than ever before. Altogether this is the boldest and most novel innovation in mining that has been put forward for a long time and it is one that might with advantage be adopted in some of the B. C. mines.

In the "Message to Garcia" a man was given a letter to deliver to the Cuban general, Garcia, and he took the letter and delivered it. He didn't ask any questions about how to do it, or where he would find Garcia, or what he should do if he didn't find him or any other thing. He delivered it. But you will notice that the job was given to him without any strings to it; the man's individuality wasn't hampered by "instructions," or formulas, or advice. He was given his job and told to do it, and allowed to do it.

The man who delivered this message is worthy of much admiration and has been held up as an exception among his fellows. Yet, when the situation is fully sized up the question remains, is he really so very exceptional? We think not.

Most men will do a thing when it is pointed out to them, but the exceptional men are those who find out for themselves what to do and do it.

But the particular advantage that this messenger had was that he was given a free hand and realizing his responsibility he delivered his message despite all obstacles, which is the highest ambition of all good soldiers.

A similar instance came under our notice a few years ago in Montreal. A big, wholesale firm employed an old soldier as inside watchman. The manager instructed him that burglars would likely try the cellar door first and if he was brave he could open the door and run them into a big vault. About mid-night the manager pounded on the cellar door to learn if the watchman was on duty. Immediately the door opened and the manager stepped in and in another moment was securely locked in the vault. It was 40 below zero but he had to stay there until morning.

The watchman made sure to have a good staff of policemen and reporters on hand to assist him in capturing the burglar when he opened the vault. The manager was so cold that he was hot and did not give the watchman any bouquets for following his instructions.

Now the messenger and the watchman both followed out their instructions, but strings were attached to the one. Moral—give an employee responsibility without any strings attached.

No matter what the work is a man will do it better and quicker if the responsibility is on him—otherwise he is cunctus and the sooner discharged the better.

ABOUT THIS DIVISION

What Mr. Bruce Said to the Outside People

When we print an interview with Mr. R. Bruce as published in the Nelson Star. It would be a good thing if we had a few more men in this district, who when travelling would take the trouble to let the world know of the wonderful resources of this valley.

R. Bruce, manager of the Paradise mine in the Windermere division of East Kootenay, is in Nelson on a business visit. Mr. Bruce reports that the present Windermere is flourishing and that the country around it is being rapidly developed. One of the principal improvements being made is the construction of a wagon road from Peterborough to the McDonald Mines, a distance of 26 miles. The government has appropriated $15,000 towards the roadway and the McDonald Mines will pay up the remainder of the cost. The McDonald Mines is a large mine, but the Lido group and intends to ship a large tonnage of ore during the coming winter.

Mr. Bruce says that the shipping of minerals has just been completed from the Paradise mine, which is located 18 miles from Peterborough. The ore is sent to Trail, and other shipments are to follow, but owing to the low prices of lead, only such ore is taken out in the course of development is to be sent to the smelter. The ore is a gray carbonate of good grade.

Several strikes have been made during the season in the Windermere division, the most important being in the Silver pit which adjoins the Paradise. The ore in the Silver pit is an oxidized silver carrying silver in large quantities. The ore is not a good grade that the owners propose taking out a small lot to Peterborough.

The government has extended the Tug creek wagon road from Spring creek to the north fork of Tug creek, a distance of 20 miles. The completion of the highway will enable several mines on the north fork to ship during the coming winter. Mr. Bruce says the mining outlook in the Windermere division is never more promising than now. What is needed is more capital to develop the section to the north of the railway transportation and it is expected that this will be secured in time. Mr. Bruce left for Trail on the afternoon train.

R. R. Bruce, a prospector by Tom Anson, of New Denver, came in on Wednesday from the head of Ten Mile where he had been examining the Silver Queen group, owned by a Montreal syndicate. If his report is favorable, the property will be worked this winter by the same syndicate.

Canada's Foreign Investment

In the Journal of the Canadian Bankers' Association H. M. P. Eckhardt in a well-reasoned article sustains the view that Canada is destined to become a leading nation. The writer argues that at a great promising country, supplying other nations with the products of the farm, the forest and the mine, is even in larger other nations into the debt, and he marshals an array of statistics to show that other countries are drawing more heavily on the Dominion from year to year. Of products we see cotton, our exports have grown from $5,051,047 in 1895 to $13,953,442 in 1900, and our exports of primary products range in the neighborhood of ten million dollars a year. The total export of minerals and the products was $77,364,755 in 1900 and $90,000,049 in 1901, varying in the neighborhood of such aggregates, while our exports of forest products have averaged $5 million dollars a year and of minerals about thirty four millions. An evidence of individual savings is furnished by the $28,649,633 deposited in the Government saving banks, the twenty million dollars with loan companies and building societies, and the fifteen millions deposited in agricultural banks. A significant item is furnished by the liabilities of loan companies and building societies. From 1900 to 1900 the debentures payable in cash increased from $10,028,102 to $13,956,082, while the debentures payable elsewhere decreased from $19,408,000 to $17,372,811. The foreign business Canadian banks also shows an increase in Canada's leading power, the foreign assets exceeding the liabilities, according to the statement of February last, by $42,506,260.

So far as the writer deals with the leading of us, about the evidence tends to a growing capacity on the part of the Dominion, but he omits an important modern development is probably affecting both Canada and the United States. It is one which but individuals who accumulate wealth and lend it abroad, and the removal of a few millions from Canada and the United States to Britain will shift the balance of debt from this side of the Atlantic to that. Wealth diffused among the people is gathered by financial companies and loaned abroad, or may be held in the shape of small individual investments in foreign securities. But the organization of modern industrial societies makes for the accumulation of vast fortunes in few hands.

TWO VERDICTS.

She was a woman, weak and thin, Whom the world condemned for a single sin.

They cast her out on the king's highway, And passed her up as they went to pray.

He was a man, and more to blame, But the world spared him a breath of shame.

Beneath his feet he saw her lie, But raised his head and passed her by.

They were the people who went to pray At the temple of God on a holy day.

They scorned the woman, forgave the man;

It was ever thus since the world began.

Time passed on and the woman died, On the Cross of Shame she was crucified.

But the world was stern and would not yield.

And they buried her in the Potter's Field.

The man died, too, and they buried him In a casket of cloth with a silver rim.

And said, as they turned from his grave away:

"We have buried an honest man today.

Two mortals, knocking at Heaven's gate, Stood face to face to inquire their fate.

He carried a passport with earthly sign, But she a pardon from Love Divine.

O, ye who judge 'twix virtue and vice, Which, think you, entered to Paradise?"

Not he whom the world had said would die.

For the woman alone was left to live.
